December Commentary

Your Fund returned -0.5% during the month compared to -0.7% for the MSCI World Index NR GBP.

December ended with more of a whimper than a bang but did cap off an extraordinary year. Following the tariff-related swoon in April global equity markets rose virtually uninterrupted for the rest of the year. One can argue that the effect of tariffs is yet to be felt and that valuations in the US have reached greater historical extremes but, so far at least, this has not mattered. Market returns have been decent.

Also notable has been the dominance of the Artificial Intelligence theme. The vast sums being deployed to build out the infrastructure needed for this new technology has created a capital expenditure boom which has benefitted a relatively narrow group of companies disproportionately. Again, one can argue that the returns on capital of this spending are currently unknown as is the timing of those returns. Further the circularity of the expenditure boosting the economy, the stock market and consumption via the wealth effect¹ lends a fragility to the current advance that may reverse should the expenditure be moderated. But again, this is all in the future.

What has happened is that there has been material divergence of performance that has thrown up some excellent global income opportunities. At Troy we seek to invest for the long term and interrupt compounding reluctantly. This tends to impart low turnover to our portfolios. Equally when companies in our universe go on sale, we will take advantage as appropriate.

We have established new investments in Siemens (world's largest industrial software company undergoing a corporate streamlining), Nike (world's pre-eminent sports apparel company), Sysco (dominant US food distribution company), IG Group (the UK's leading spread-betting franchise under impressive new management) and Coloplast (superior medical technology company producing loyalty-inducing intimate products with structurally growing end markets). These were funded by sales of Cisco, Medtronic, Johnson & Johnson, Hershey and Magnum Ice Cream (spun out of Unilever) as well as material reductions in Philip Morris and Nintendo. A busy year indeed.

¹ The wealth effect is the idea that an increase in an individual's wealth will lead to an increase in their consumption (spending).
