December Commentary

Trojan Fund Europe launched in October 2025 as a dedicated euro-denominated vehicle for Troy's multi-asset strategy. To help investors understand the rationale behind the fund's current asset allocation, below is a snapshot of the key observations and actions taken across the strategy during 2025, as described for the sterling-dominated Trojan Fund:

The strategy produced a return of high-single digits, in sterling terms, for the calendar year. This was driven by a combination of stellar performance from gold and a respectable performance from the Fund's equities (up around +10% in local terms). Gold increased +65% in dollar terms, its best calendar year since 1979. We expect that gold will continue to catch a bid as investors diversify away from the dollar and seek out dependable safe havens.

Whilst 2025 marked a strong year for global equity indices, it also presented opportunities for those prepared to look beneath the surface. The S&P 500 'Quality Index'¹ lagged the main S&P 500 by the largest amount since 1999. A number of businesses that we favour, and which have continued to deliver strong operating performance, have seen their valuations de-rate. This is partly because they have failed to rouse animal spirits to the same extent or because they have fallen out of favour due to perceived AI-related threats. We took advantage of this in 2025 to both add to existing holdings (including Visa and Experian) and initiate new holdings in the strategy (such as L'Oréal, LSEG and Hubbell). As a result, the equity allocation increased from c. 30% at the start of the year to c. 40% today. The majority of equities held in the strategy trade at or below their long-term average valuations despite the fact that stock markets in aggregate have become more expensive.

Much of the increase to the strategy's equity exposure occurred in early April during the Trump tariff-driven sell-off – continuing our discipline of acting dynamically during market dislocations. The volatility of that period and its much-feared ramifications may feel like a distant memory. However, it is worth recalling that when expectations are high not much is required to throw equity markets off course. Cognisant of the ongoing risks to markets, we retain around a third of the Fund's value in safe-haven assets and liquidity, and a further 30% in index-linked bonds.
