October Commentary

Your Fund (O Acc GBP) returned +2.7% during the month.

Equities were the primary driver of returns in October. Alphabet, the largest single contributor, reported strong results with sales growth accelerating across all its major units. Search and YouTube Ads grew 15%, whilst Cloud growth accelerated to 34%.¹ We added to the holding both in December 2024 and in April 2025. Since April, the shares have approximately doubled as concerns over AI disruption gave way to an appreciation of Alphabet's advantages. It is unsurprising, for a company which has been investing in AI for years, that its own large language model, Gemini, is proving highly competitive versus peers. Alphabet has the added benefit of network effects built up over years; Google Maps recently became the company's seventh platform to house over two billion users. The shares' valuation has risen from just under 15x forward earnings² to around 24x forward earnings² today as Alphabet's operating performance suggests it is well placed to evolve its business model for an age of AI. We do not think this is an egregious valuation given the company's prospects but we have taken some profits, conscious of the risks to large-cap technology stocks should the market correct.

We also saw a strong contribution during the month from Agilent, the manufacturer of life sciences. We added to the shares in April following a decline in valuation. Since then, the shares have appreciated roughly 50%. In October, we met with the head of the company's CrossLab division, which sells services and consumables to Agilent's end-customers ranging from the pharmaceutical sector to food and academia. It does so with the help of 4,000 field services professionals, highly trained engineers who are trusted partners to Agilent's customers around the world. The division, which is growing recurring revenues at a high single-digit rate, with operating margins in the low-thirties, is expected to contribute to group earnings growth in the low double-digits over the medium term.
