July Commentary

Your Fund returned +2.8% during the month compared to -0.9% for the MSCI World Index NR GBP.

The relatively minor headline moves in global equity indices belies substantial churn across global capital markets. In equities the "hardware good/software bad" mantra that has driven returns in recent months showed signs of fatigue which has benefitted the Fund. While the US S&P 500 was only down slightly in Sterling terms, more technology hardware focussed indices fell further. The Korean exchange, which is dominated by companies engaged in manufacturing memory chips such as Samsung Electronics and SK Hynix, declined by 17.6% and the Philadelphia Semiconductor Index fell 20% intra-month. Conversely, software companies rallied.

Although this rotation was already evident, we now know it was turbocharged by the unwinding of a levered Fund.

Activity was also notable in the bond market with the US 10-year treasury yield reaching 4.74% and the 30 year 5.27%, each rising substantially in the month. This was partly a function of oil prices which rose sharply as the US-Iran hostilities flared up once more. The Federal Reserve kept rates unchanged but three members of the Board dissented by calling for a rate rise.

The Japanese yen made an interesting countertrend move as the currency strengthened following intervention by the US and Japanese authorities.

At such times, it can be useful to take a step back and put events in context. To us, this is all consistent with a view that the Artificial Intelligence (AI) capital expenditure boom may be late cycle and taking place within the context of structural changes in the global economy as the world balkanises into a US and Chinese sphere of influence. We should expect ongoing geo-political uncertainty, more inflation and stretched government finances even as strategic and economic autonomy is re-established. This is likely to lead to higher levels of volatility across markets as demonstrated this month.

While this represents an unsettling backdrop it should also provide plenty of opportunity for the global income investor.
