September Commentary

Your Fund returned +0.3% during the month compared to -0.2% for the MSCI World Index (NR) GBP.

In September the U.S. Department of Justice formally sued Visa for breach of anti-trust rules. The government alleges that Visa unlawfully foreclosed competition by defending its over 60% share of the U.S. debit card market through a web of restrictive contracts and incentives with processors, issuers, and purported rivals. There is no sugar-coating this news, and we don't believe that Visa will come through the process unscathed. There are, however, some mitigating circumstances to consider. First, unless a settlement is found in the interim, there will be several years of court proceedings and appeals before any changes take place to Visa's business practices. Second, the U.S. debit market accounts for an estimated low teens percentage of Visa's group revenues. And third, as the original debit network in the U.S., it is reasonable to assume that Visa's network effects, technical infrastructure, and economies of scale will maintain a dominant market share, with or without certain legal clauses between itself and its business partners.

A similar set of mitigating circumstances might also apply to an analysis of Alphabet's U.S. Search anti-trust case (although it is more advanced with a judge already ruling against Alphabet). Whilst both cases pose credible risks to market share and prospective growth rates, we suspect they also cast a shadow over the strong progress these companies are making in other countries and product categories. Both companies also have ample flexibility to adjust their costs to soften the impact on their bottom lines.

Alphabet and Visa have faced multiple challenges and controversies in the many years (ten and eight, respectively) that the Fund has invested in their shares. This persistent uncertainty has resulted in valuations that have never reached egregious levels, allowing growth in cash flows to drive the entirety of the high teens annualised returns (in USD) since the initial investments were made. We are optimistic that a substantial opportunity remains as continued strong growth combines with reasonable valuations.
