August Commentary

Your Fund returned -1.4% during the month compared to +0.5% for the MSCI World Index (NR) GBP.

Fund Managers, who by allocating capital in global markets are at the vanguard of the capitalist system (or so we would like to think) do not often quote Lenin. There is however one phrase that resonates today; "there are decades when nothing happens, and weeks where decades happen".

Many years ago, we learnt about Butskellism – a portmanteau of Conservative Chancellor Rab Butler and his Labour predecessor Hugh Gaitskell. It described a settled post-war political consensus in the UK in favour of a significant welfare state, Keynesian economic management¹ and the pursuit of full employment. This consensus was disrupted by the Thatcher and Reagan administrations in the 1980s and 1990s, before the steady increase in taxation and the size of Government resumed its upward trajectory following the first few years of the Blair government which, after initially showing some fiscal constraint, began to spend in earnest.

After the brief Cameron/Osborne "austerity" interlude governments of all political stripes went back to business-as-usual culminating in the splurge needed to offset the effects of COVID and lockdown. To the pre-Thatcherite consensus was added, a further agreed wisdom, that in a safer world, protected by the US, defence spending could be safely downgraded to free up money to be spent on more societally beneficial areas such as health and social care.

The result has been an inexorable rise in levels of government debt to GDP across the developed world. So much so obvious. While this could be funded with low interest rates, the great ship of state could sail on without hard choices about spending and taxation having to be made. But recently this has changed.

As many of these trends (inflation, globalisation, security, US dominance) reverse, the consensus on which this spending was based is looking dangerously complacent and budgets worryingly stretched.

The yield on the UK 30-year Gilt as at the end of August was 5.64% and rising having been under 1% as recently as 2021. This rapid uplift in yields created some market disruption in 2022 but has been largely ignored since the launch of ChatGPT in November of that year. But it cannot be ignored forever. This rise in borrowing costs in the context of unsustainable debt loads is being echoed by similar moves around the world notably in the US, France and Japan. After many years of QE²-numbed bond markets, debt investors are finally becoming concerned about developed world debts and deficits. Could it be that we are witnessing the end of the cheery debt-based consensus and that the decades of "nothing happening" could be upended?

The timing of such a seismic event is impossible to predict and has been expected many times before. But if the bond markets are finally saying "enough", then the economic, political and investment implications will be profound.

¹ Keynesian economic management is a counter-cyclical government approach, advocating for increased fiscal policy (spending and taxes) to stimulate aggregate demand during economic downturns

² Quantitative easing
